Put the world's economy to work for you.

As countries across the globe focus on building their economies, investing globally opens the door to potential dynamic and growing investment opportunities in both developed and emerging markets.

Trends in the Share of World Gross Domestic Product

While the United States share of gross domestic product (GDP) has remained relatively steady over thirty years, Europe's share has declined fairly significantly. We believe Asia's uptrend that began in the 1970s will continue to become even more prevalent over the next 10-20 years.

Wealth of natural resources, opportunities for importing and exporting goods, political stability and economic policies that support competitiveness, growth and employment are among the factors that make investing in specific countries across the globe attractive. Many emerging economies are committed to building infrastructure and creating new opportunities for local entrepreneurs. These same improvements encourage large domestic blue-chip companies to expand subsidiary operations internationally and engage in worldwide trade.

As different countries rely more and more on each other, their financial economies become intertwined. This is referred to as globalization. It is fueled by the spread of technology, communication and transportation and mass migration of people.

These positive changes in the world are creating growth potential that invites you as an investor to put your money to work around the world.

A risk-managed portfolio built with global vision.

We strive to provide investors with exposure to what we consider to be the best markets in the world.

Our analyses of economic conditions, foreign exchange rate movements and the impact of politics, regulations and taxes underlie every decision we make for the Huntington Global Select Markets Fund. Our disciplined approach begins with our macro-economic view of each country we consider. We target only those countries displaying positive and improving fiscal and monetary policies. Next, we consider the country's government, looking for progressive, advantageous tax policies. In our opinion, these attributes are key to providing potential for solid long-term performance.

Looking for new opportunities and growth potential in emerging countries.

In this Fund, we have the flexibility to invest in equity opportunities at home and abroad, as well as fixed-income securities and Exchange Traded Funds (ETFs) where appropriate.

Many emerging countries are enhancing their productivity and exhibiting the financial disciplines necessary to set them apart in a global economic environment. Two significant global trends in today's emerging markets are a growing consumer class and an imperative need for infrastructure improvement. As a result, many are experiencing rising per capita income and strong demand for consumer and other goods. At the same time, companies across the globe are positioning themselves to also take advantage of these secular themes by consolidating operations globally and building greater market share.

The same disciplined security selection process employed by all Huntington Funds is used to identify global securities for Huntington Global Select Markets Fund. Our rigorous analysis helps determine what we believe are fundamental strengths and potential for growth in our investment candidates. To help manage risk, we continually monitor industry and geographic exposure in the Fund in light of changing global economics, striving to meet our objective of total return for our investors.

Past performance is not indicative of future results. Indices are unmanaged, are not available for direct investment and do not represent the performance of a single fund.

Diversification does not ensure a profit or guarantee against loss.

The Fund is subject to the risks associated with its investments in emerging market securities, which tend to be more volatile and less liquid than securities traded in developed countries.

An investment in an exchange-traded fund (ETF) generally presents the same primary risks as an investment in a conventional fund (i.e., one that is not exchange traded) that has the same investment objectives, strategies and policies. The price of an ETF can fluctuate up or down, and the Fund could lose money investing in an ETF if the prices of the securities owned by the ETF go down. In addition, ETFs may be subject to the following risks that do not apply to conventional funds: (i) the market price of an ETF's shares may trade above or below their net asset value; (ii) an active trading market for an ETF's shares may not develop or be maintained; or (iii) trading of an ETF's shares may be halted if the listing exchange's officials deem such action appropriate, the shares are delisted from the exchange, or the activation of market-wide "circuit breakers" (which are tied to large decreases in stock prices) halts stock trading generally.

Mid-cap and small-cap investing involves greater risk not associated with investing in more established companies, such as greater price volatility, business risk, less liquidity and increased competitive threat.

International investing involves special risks including currency risk, increased volatility of foreign securities, political risks and differences in auditing and other financial standards.

The Fund is subject to the risks associated with its investments in emerging market securities, which tend to be more volatile and less liquid than securities traded in developed countries.

For more complete information about the Huntington Funds, please call 1-800-253-0412 for a prospectus or log onto our web site at www.huntingtonfunds.com. You should consider the Funds' investment objectives, risks, charges and expenses carefully before you invest. Information about these and other important subjects is in the Funds' prospectus, which you should read carefully before investing. The investment return and principal value of an investment will fluctuate so that an investor's shares when redeemed may be worth more or less than their original cost.
